Telford Grooming Gangs and Tommy Robinson

I would like to express my perspective. I believe Tommy Robinson is sincerely invested in the well-being of the victims and survivors of child sexual abuse. He is evolving in his understanding, acknowledging his shortcomings and the way he is perceived by others. He is aware that he might not be the ideal person to address this issue, as it should remain a political. His efforts are commendable, and no one else is undertaking this work to the same degree.

My primary focus is on the survivors, the victims, and the children, and Tommy Robinson is making a positive impact for them.

If you have reservations about Tommy, I recommend watching Episode 3 featuring Sarah, which illustrates how he now supports her. Initially, she wanted nothing to do with him due to his political views, but after viewing earlier episodes of The Rape of Britain, she reached out to him for a conversation.

Sarah escaped at the age of 13, approximately a decade ago, to live with a 42-year-old man, her abuser. She became pregnant at 14 and received no assistance from social services or law enforcement. What is happening within those organizations? Despite having a substantial police file, Sarah was not interviewed during the 2013 police investigation, Operation Chalice, into child abuse in Telford. The cycle of abuse has persisted for generations, yet many victims remain unsupported, and perpetrators are rarely held accountable. Why is this the case?

The presence of a racial component in this abuse is indisputable. The primary objective must be to eradicate child sexual abuse and trafficking, support the survivors, and hold the offenders accountable. Why is this not occurring? Tommy Robinson is taking action, regardless of your views on his intentions. What actions are you taking?

Racism or the perception of racism should not serve as a justification for permitting child sexual abuse and trafficking to persist.

Organised abuse has been documented as far back as the 1970s.
