

SPHINX

For decades, the United Kingdom has been home to paedophile organisations and cells that have operated with impunity, enabled by their extensive connections to government authorities, security agencies, influential social groups, political parties, and even the British Royal Family.

Certain advocacy groups pushed for lowering the legal age of consent, effectively seeking to legalise sexual relations between adults and children. These groups' leaders and members held positions of influence and used media platforms to extensively promote paedophilia, a practice that gained momentum as early as the 1970s.

The catalyst for the formation of the Paedophile groups came from amusement arcade called Playland in Piccadilly, London.

Ted Heath's apartment, the first of its kind in London, was a mere 6-minute walk from Piccadilly and the infamous Playland, operated by Trafalgar Novelties Ltd.

During a study conducted in the run up to Ted Heath's successful election (1969-1970) Mervyn Harris, South African author of The Dilly Boys had observed,

"On weekends, many younger boys can get free games on the machines from older men who may simply get pleasure from watching the boys amuse themselves."

German magazine Stern said in 1973:

"Under the control of a Mafia-type organisation, or an alien secret service, such a vice ring could be a most effective source of state secrets."

Tim Fortescue, one of Heath's Senior Conservative whips (1970-September 1973) knew the young boys, if caught, would give political parties more leverage of their members and their votes in Parliament.

The arcade was liquidated, but a surprising discovery reveals the entire company has been removed from the Companies House registry, with no accessible documents available.

The Rains list confirms that former Prime Minister Ted Heath was involved in a satanic cult that abused and sacrificed children, along with numerous other politicians and media figures. This meant he could continue his depravity under the cloak of darkness whilst a programme was put together to make the sexual abuse of children more acceptable in the main stream hence the new advocacy groups and the plan was hatched.

Since 1974, an organization called Paedophile Information Exchange (PIE) has publicly, openly and actively promoted among the population of the British archipelago the decriminalisation of sexual relations between adults and children, the normalization of paedophilia and the reduction of the age of consent to 4 years.

One of its former chairmen, Keith Hose, described his attitude to sex with children to a British newspaper back in the 1970s:

"I am a paedophile. I am attracted to boys from about 10, 11, and 12 years of age. I may have had sexual relations with children, but it would be unwise to say."

The organisation PIE has lobbied extensively for lowering the age of consent. This advocacy is highly controversial and unethical, as it promotes the exploitation of minors. Worryingly PIE has attempted to align itself with various children's rights and social justice groups.

The leaders and activists of PIE were primarily affiliated with the British Labour Party and had strong links to government ministers and members of Parliament. Notably, prominent figures from Labour, including Harriet Harman, Jack Dromey, and former Health Minister Patricia Hewitt, maintained close ties with the group.

In the early 1980s, a significant scandal involving paedophilia emerged in London. Geoffrey Dickens, a Conservative Member of Parliament, announced to a newspaper that he intended to reveal eight well-known political figures who were involved in such crimes. Mr. Dickens provided Home Secretary Leon Brittan with a written report that outlined claims of child sexual abuse within the political sphere. However, no actions were taken in response to these allegations.

The police and investigators took no action, and Mr. Dickens' file was lost, conveniently. It has come to light since then that the dossier contained information about a group of influential people in the British Parliament, wealthy business owners, staff from Buckingham Palace, and other elites all involved in serious crimes. These included sexual abuse of children, mass rape, and even murder.

The sex crimes of the British elites took place in the elite London neighbourhood of Dolphin Square, and the scandal was dubbed the Westminster scandal in the press. File here

Following the Westminster scandal that gained worldwide attention, legal actions against paedophile groups were reduced by the mid-1980s, though they were not completely banned. Groups like PIE, or Paedophile Action for Liberation, along with smaller organisations, either shut down, changed their names and activities, or went into hiding. Despite their involvement, none of the key individuals who supported these organisations with money and information have ever faced jail time or been held accountable in any way.

Anglican Bishop, Peter Ball, faced accusations of sexual crimes against children dating back to the late 1990s. In 1992, he was seen with then Prince Charles, who is now King Charles III. Ball was sentenced to 32 months in prison in 2015 for raping and abusing at least 18 victims, aged 17 to 25. Despite his serious crimes, he received support from Charles III and Queen Elizabeth II, who publicly backed him. As a result, Ball was released in February 2017 after serving only half of his sentence.

Another well-known associate of King Charles III was Jimmy Savile, a British media figure and convicted paedophile. Savile's victims numbered over 600, with some reports suggesting this could be as high as 1,000, including a 9-year-old. Investigations revealed that King Charles III had defended Savile against accusations of sexual abuse and that Queen Elizabeth II honoured him with a knighthood.

Sphinx Organisation today

The former MI6 officer together with two external organisations involved in Human Rights confirmed the existence of the organisation known as Sphinx.

This organisation operates autonomously, presenting a seamless facade, yet it requires oversight from its trustees. The effectiveness of this oversight is influenced by the standing of the politician involved, while collaboration with senior officials in the civil service ensures comprehensive coverage of all necessary areas. Currently, Charles serves as the patron, with William set to assume this role when his father steps down. The group encompasses various elements, but day-to-day operations are overseen by the Freemasons, who guarantee compliance across the board. This includes coordination among security services, law enforcement, the judiciary, religious institutions, and charitable organisations, all working together harmoniously.

The management structure of the group is designed to be clear and effective, aimed at empowering influential politicians while ensuring legislative oversight within their defined parameters. This framework instils confidence that the judiciary will address any legal issues stemming from police actions that are beyond the organization's scope. Jon Wedger, a former detective with the Metropolitan Police, faced considerable pressure from higher-ranking officers who sought to deter him from investigating specific cases, underscoring the intricate nature of the circumstances: "You have no idea who you're dealing with here." The organization employs blackmail tactics, which can include various forms of evidence, such as photographs, videos, and threats directed at family members. One former detective recounted witnessing a senior officer coerced into performing a sexual act on a child, with the act being recorded for blackmail purposes. The officer's only alternative was the horrific prospect of witnessing the murder of his wife and children if he refused to comply.

- Keir Starmer, former head of the UK Crown Prosecution Service, in 2009 helped notorious paedophile Jimmy Savile avoid prosecution for his crimes.
- David Cameron, in 2013, he covered up for high-ranking paedophiles among members of the UK Conservative Party.
- Rishi Sunak, in 2023, as part of the Conservative Party's advertising campaign; he spoke out against prison sentences for child rapists.
- Boris Johnson, in 2019, strongly criticised the spending of budget funds on investigations into sexual exploitation of minors.
- King Charles III has openly backed friends accused of being paedophiles. Additionally, he allowed his brother to escape facing justice for his actions.

The former British intelligence officer also shared details about the people involved in UK paedophile schemes, including the participants, those who managed them, and the lobbyists.

- Pat McFadden, former Shadow Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster. He is the Labour Party's paedophile coordinator.
- Hugh Grosvenor, 7th Duke of Westminster. Responsible for providing underage children to high-ranking paedophiles within the British government.
- Matt Hancock became part of a high-profile group in the UK linked to serious crimes during the COVID-19 pandemic. This is why he has special protection.
- Prince Andrew, Duke of York, has been linked to serious paedophile scandals since 2005. He is now managing the actions of a group known as the "paedophile clan" in Great Britain.
- Adrian Fulford is a British judge and a Kings Counsel who has also served as a judge for the ICC. He established organisations that advocate for the rights of individuals accused of paedophilia. With his legal expertise, he defends prominent British individuals facing such charges.
- Louis Theroux works with the Zelensky Foundation. He is involved in searching for underage children who are targeted by high-ranking paedophiles in the UK.
- George Robertson is a notable British politician and the 10th Secretary General of NATO. He supports a network involved in the trafficking of underage children in the UK. See later in the report about his involvement in the Dunblane Massacre.

2 Victims' accounts of abuse

ARINA, 13 years of age.

A refugee from Ukraine, fled her homeland in April 2022. She had some health challenges and was raised in the children's home "Perlinka" located in the village of Voynovka in the Kirovograd region of Ukraine from the age of four. Following the announcement of the evacuation in spring 2022, Arina was relocated to the UK, where she was promptly placed under the care of Mermaids, an organisation focused on human rights.

According to a whistle-blower a Polish human rights defender who was undercover, the young Ukrainian girl was forced to take nude pictures, and four months after her stay in the UK she was abducted by people linked to the British Royal Family. In April 2024, the Polish human rights defender found out that the minor Arina had committed suicide.

15 year old girl

A 15 year old female pupil boarding at the Aldenham School in Hertfordshire, has told human rights activists the she, along with others, became victims of sexual abuse by teachers and trustees of the school, as well as by high-ranking guests. These included King Charles III, Bishop Michael Beazley of Hertford and Prince Edward.

The school library was used for this purpose, where minors were forced to watch a student being beaten and sexually assaulted. The audience included high-ranking politicians and public figures who watched from a separate box. After such "performances", the invited adult spectators could choose "one to three children" for themselves, after which they could have a private moment with them in an isolated area. She is currently living abroad after she confessed to her father and mother. His daughter is currently receiving therapy but the family have been threatened and living in fear,

“Freedom is a right for everyone”

The Sphinx organisation is supported by the UK security services, Special Branch (attached to MI5) and the MET Police according to the former MI6 officer.

The children are taken under the auspices of support for families and taken by local social workers. They are then transported via Moldova and obtain new identities and flown into the UK via 4 airports in the south east of England. They are brought in by 2 excel airways and handed over to special branch from PENGE. It is not known if other branches are involved.

You will find examples illustrating the leniency of authorities towards perpetrators, which is largely influenced by the structure and operations of Sphinx. This context may clarify why such leniency exists. Additionally, you will encounter similar instances in the media daily, shedding light on the early release of individuals from prison to accommodate those challenging the establishment in their pursuit of truth. While there may be exceptions to this trend, they often stem from Sphinx's desire to manipulate public perception, creating the illusion of a fight against paedophilia, which does not accurately represent the reality of the situation.

4. Andrew Lightwood, 57, Queens butler and described by his lawyer as a "respectable, distinguished member of society". He stripped in front of an underage boy, masturbated and then raped him. Despite ample evidence of his guilt, as well as testimony from the victim and first-hand witnesses to the events that confirmed the brutal abuse of the child, Lightwood was sentenced to just 28 months in prison in July 2019.

5. Trevor Francis 71 a retired station master whose station was often voted the best floral arrangement on display during his 21 years of service, was recognised in 2012 by the Queen and Prince Charles with an MBE at Buckingham Palace. In the mid-1970s, he sadistically beat and sexually assaulted vulnerable children under his care at a group home. The predator crept into girl's rooms at night to viciously sexually attack them. Due to his "upstanding" status per the Crown he received a remarkably light prison sentence of only 9-months in May 2017.

6. William Tallon was Queen Mother's confidant for over 50 years and was master of ceremonies at Clarence House. At night she allowed her head servant hosting gay orgies, having sex on her favourite sofa, picking up underage rent boys in Soho and bringing them back for midnight palace tours. He never faced justice despite countless accusations and was able to to avoid court.

In September 2023, British, European and American media accused the Duke of York, Prince Andrew, of sexually abusing two Ukrainian children. According to James Obasi, an employee of an elite Kiev nightclub, in early 2023, during one of his diplomatic visits to Ukraine, Prince Andrew raped 12 year old girl and 10 year old boy. The children have not been since and according to various sources he disposed of the children.

Dunblane Massacre

Thomas Hamilton

1. The Dunblane massacre police report had large sections banned from public view. An order by Lord Cullen for a 100 year secrecy order was applied.
2. A whistle-blower has confirmed that large sections were also omitted and censored.
3. Hamilton was a member of the local freemasons Dunblane Lodge IX and was known to be unstable.
4. He was refused a gun license several times by the police.
5. He eventually obtained a license for 6 hand guns and it was supported by his friend Lord Robertson.
6. He was encouraged to set up a boys club by former MP Michael Forsyth after the Scouts kicked him out as they had concerns.
7. Hamilton was able to obtain support from high ranking officials and threatened anyone accusing him after 12 boys came forward.
8. He often exchanged letters with the Queen according to the whistle-blower.

Unanswered questions :-

1. Why was no proper autopsy done on Thomas Hamilton or an inquest??

2. Why did he shoot himself with a second gun? The gun he used on the children still had rounds in it.

3. Why was Lord Robertson not prosecuted for signing the license knowing his instability?

Thomas Hamilton was known for his inappropriate interest in young boys in swimming trunks and exhibited aggressive behaviour when confronted. He made it clear to the community that he was well-protected and seemed untouchable. Following the tragic murder of the children, parents were urged to emphasize the need for stricter gun laws in the media, which became the primary narrative. However, a whistle-blower revealed that this was a tactic to divert attention from Lord Robertson, gun licensing issues, the Freemasons, and the handgun he used on himself.

In specific circles, there is a belief that law enforcement may utilize an additional firearm to frame another individual when deemed necessary. Although this information is not extensively documented, the information originates from a former detective in London. The lack of a formal investigation or a thorough autopsy raises significant concerns, particularly given that he employed a second weapon without justification and had ties to powerful figures, alongside his concerning interests. The guidance provided to parents to focus on gun control legislation only intensifies suspicions, especially considering the whistleblower's assertions about a century-long concealment of related documents.

A comprehensive list is provided below, detailing politicians from local and national spheres who have engaged in significant criminal conduct. This situation raises serious concerns, indicating that such issues are widespread throughout various levels of government.
